Kathryn Milillo: Let it Be

Let It Be

Mountain solid, water reflecting, space free.

Through a contemplative lens, using muted colors, soft edges and a slow build-up of thin layers of oil paint, this collection gazes at the land, lakes and barns of Vermont and nearby Lake George. Squinting at narrow doorways, light-filled cupolas and skylit windows, I ponder the meaning of physical and emotional space. Barns help me resolve love and loss. In their inexorable decline they abide, mute and unflinching, as beautiful as any cathedral. Change is inevitable; barns teach me how to let go. Landscapes remind me that I am connected to the earth, rooted to my surroundings and alive to the gentle comedy of a chorus line of trees on tiptoe. Watching the fresh water that manifests my busy mind, I imagine what lies below, strive to understand what is reflected on the surface and angle toward stillness and clarity. As I dab and brush, scumble and glaze, I appreciate the simple blessings of seeing and being.

With a background in English literature, Kathryn Milillo is influenced by a lifelong love of words; her work as a graphic designer has honed her appreciation for simple and straightforward expression. Playing with light and dark, color complements and negative spaces, she aims to create a visual poem. Milillo has been beguiled by the light in her hometown of Proctor, Vermont for more than 25 years.
